

The Primary Promise Campaign

Building the Nation's Model Health System for Children

New Children's Hospital

PROJECT OBJECTIVE: Extend pediatric excellence across the Intermountain West

What if...you could help bring the power of Primary Children's to Utah County?

THE SITUATION

Intermountain Healthcare is significantly expanding its capacity for pediatric care with a second Primary Children's Hospital campus in Lehi, Utah. Situated in northern Utah County, the 38-acre campus will dramatically improve access to state-of-the-art pediatric care in one of the nation's fastest-growing counties.

Consider that:

- The pediatric population of Utah County is growing at twice the rate of Salt Lake County. Utah County's youth population is projected to exceed Salt Lake County's by 2040.
- Utah County patients already account for 13% of patient volume at Primary Children's Hospital campus in Salt Lake City.

- More than half of the children treated at the Salt Lake City campus must travel an hour or more to receive treatment; many others go without needed care because access can be difficult.
- The current number of pediatric beds in south Salt Lake and Utah County is inadequate to support the area's number of children.

THE CRITICAL NEED

With the growth of Utah County comes an urgent need for high-quality, comprehensive pediatric care.

The need for pediatric subspecialty care is especially acute. At present, children with complex medical conditions — including trauma — must travel to Salt Lake City for treatment. In the case of acute behavioral health, Intermountain Healthcare has no pediatric inpatient beds in all of Utah County. Families seeking subspecialty care often must travel great distances — which is especially disruptive when the child is admitted for multiple nights.

THE PROMISE: Bring the Power of Primary Children's to Utah County

A new 468,000-square-foot, state-of-the-art hospital will bring the renowned clinical excellence of Primary Children's to families in Utah and south Salt Lake counties. The 38-acre campus in Lehi will feature five floors, 66 beds, a three-story medical office building, and a medical staff fully integrated with the expert clinicians at Primary Children's Hospital in Salt Lake City.

For the first time, Utah County families will be able to access a wide variety of pediatric subspecialty-trained physicians who are able to treat the most complex of medical conditions. In fact, the intensive care unit (ICU) will be connected to the Salt Lake City ICU using TeleHealth technologies, ensuring patients receive the same extraordinary level of treatment and support.

Opening in early 2024, the Primary Children's Hospital campus in Lehi will feature:

- Surgical Neonatal Intensive Care services
- Pediatric Intensive Care services
- Acute Medical and Surgical Care services
- Comprehensive Behavioral Health services
- 19-bay Emergency Department and Trauma services
- 6-room operating suite
- 8 infusion rooms, including chemotherapy
- Advanced imaging
- Pediatric subspecialties and diagnostics

HELP US KEEP THE PROMISE

The Primary Promise Campaign seeks philanthropic support to create a second state-of-the-art Primary Children's Hospital in north Utah County that will significantly decrease the travel time required of thousands of families.

With the power of your support, we will keep our promise to the kids of Utah County and beyond. Because of you, top-quality pediatric healthcare will be more accessible to families across the Intermountain West.
